The DOJ consumer complaint database is for information only. Please understand the DOJ does not verify the accuracy of consumer complaints when they are entered into the database. Keep in mind that several factors, including a company's size and volume of transactions, may affect the likelihood of a consumer complaint being filed. The number of complaints about a business may not be a reliable measure as to whether it is appropriately conducting business.

In order to narrow your search, these results can be sorted alphabetically. Please click on a column heading to sort its contents.

Not what you're looking for? You may find information about a business under several different names that the business uses or has used in the past, as well as its corporate name(s). Additionally, be aware that some businesses have similar sounding names. If you are searching for complaints against a company with a common name, pay close attention to its business description. This will help make sure you are researching complaints for the correct company.
